

Cornelius and the Big Race

There once was a young ball named Cornelius.
Cornelius was not like the others because everyone in his town was a suction cup ball.

Cornelius had always dreamed of competing in the county fair race, but without suction cups he wouldn't be able to make it up the hills in the race.

Cornelius tried covering himself in glue, hoping that it would help him up the hill. The glue did not work, and just ended up with Cornelius being sad and sticky.

Next, Cornelius tried covering himself in tape, hoping that it would help stick to the hills and pull himself up. The tape did not work, and just left Cornelius tangled up at the bottom of the hill. Cornelius was losing hope, and would soon give up on his dream of competing in the county fair race.

Then, Cornelius had an idea...

He decided to try one last time to prepare for the race. He found an old grappling hook, hoping that it would allow him to pull himself up and over the hills.

At every hill Cornelius reached, he threw his grappling hook up and pulled with all his might to get himself up the hills.

CORNELIUS HAD WON THE RACE!

FINISH

Written and Illustrated by Kristina Richardson
BVT Multimedia Communications
BVT Design and Print Center

